

In this task, to rate a reply to a question, two dimensions of criteria are given. One is the relevance of the reply to the question. The other one is whether the reply is well-organized by itself.

A reply is firstly decided by its relevance to the question, if it is highly related, it will fall in 3 or 4 or 5, if it is very unrelated, it will fall in either 1 or 2. If it is kindly related, it will go into 3.

Then a reply will be judged by its organization on arguments, examples, and conclusions and fluency. In highly related replies, if it is well-organized and fluent, it will be a 5. If structure can be seen even though it is not very clear, it will be a 4. If no hint of structure is seen and inarticulate, it will fall into 3. In unrelated replies, if it is well-organized, it will be a 2. If structure can be seen even though it is not very clear, it will be a 2. If no hint of structure is seen or it is inarticulate, it will be 1.

Here are some examples of how to distinguish between different levels:

1. Relevance

Question: How can I deal with loneliness in a healthier way?

Reply: Journal!! That's the best thing ever. Not everyone needs to know your thoughts, and you don't need to tell everyone, everything. From my personal experience, the more you tell about what you want, the good things happening and the bad, it goes downhill. Rarely are people genuinely happy for you and vice versa. It's better to be low-key, do your thing and be happy. Also, I'm confused with the question vs your caption. They seem unrelated?

Comment: That's a good example of relevance. The author gives his/her answer to deal with loneliness directly and use the rest text to illustrate the reason for that. It will fall into either 3 or 4.

Question: What's your favourite thing to do when alone?

Reply: It's fappy time everyone!!!!

Comment: This is an unrelated example to the question. The question is asking for an action or experience but the reply is an emotional expression, which is unrelated.

2. Organization

Question: It's time for the Kentucky Derby - what's the dumbest name you would give your prized horse?

Reply: Gonzo Because, The Kentucky Derby is Decadent and Depraved...

Comment: This is a very tricky one in organization. Firstly, it is obvious that this is very related to the question since a name is given so it will fall into 3 or 4 or 5. Then I think it will be a 5 because even though this sentence is too short to show his structure, it is very concise and fully expresses what the author wants to say with the story behind.

Question: What is something you wish you knew when you were in your teens?

Reply: I wish someone had explained community college to me. I had no idea that was a good option until after I was out of school.

Comment: Firstly, it is obvious that this is very related to the question since a situation is given so it will fall into 3 or 4 or 5. But this answer doesn't fully explain itself. More illustration is needed for this answer. So it will be a 3.
